

'Flight 19'

A Remote Viewing Ongoing Investigation
Rev. 0406

By Vance S. West – <http://www.trinityscience.com>
Dec 2005

At 1410 hours, the afternoon of 05 December, 1945, U.S. Naval Flight 19, consisting of five TBM Avenger Torpedo Bombers with a total of 14 men aboard, left the Naval Air Station in Fort Lauderdale, Florida on an authorized advanced over water navigational training flight and disappeared without a trace.

The first hint of trouble came at 1600 hours. An intercepted radio message, believed to be between the leader of Flight 19 and another pilot, indicated that the instructor was uncertain of his position and the direction of the Florida coast. Further, the aircraft seemed to be experiencing compass malfunctions.

The few additional transmissions were inadequate to establish the exact nature of the trouble or the location of the group. Then all radio contact was lost.

Immediately, a PBM Mariner flying boat carrying 13 crewmen and rescue equipment departed from the NAS Banana River Navy base. Its mission - to search for the Avengers. Ten minutes after take-off, the pilot checked in with the tower. And was never heard from again.

Despite numerous attempts, the five Avengers have never been found.

In December 2005, I decided to employ remote viewing to take a look back at the events surrounding the disappearance of 'Flight 19'. With an appearance on GhostlyTalk Radio on December 4th, I thought it suiting to see what information remote viewing would shed upon this subject. I wasn't sure where it would go, or if the data produced by 'blind' remote viewers would be conclusive enough to draw any basic conclusions.

For those unfamiliar with remote viewing, I find Joe McMoneagle's definition very suiting:

"The ability to produce information that is correct about a place, event, person or object located somewhere in time/space, which is completely blind to the remote viewer."

.: The Project & Tasking

In any remote viewing project you need 'viewers'. These are the folks that produce the data. On this project we opened up participation to anyone and everyone. No skill level exclusions.... with the help of GhostlyTalk Radio and TKR Remote Viewing Forums we luckily had some people send in work.

All the remote viewers were 100% 'blind' to the target, meaning they were totally unaware in any way of what the target was. Taskings, or questions, were assigned random identifiers (Target IDs) and this is what the viewers were given to conduct their sessions. For this project my sole purpose was to answer or explore one main question:

- What happened to 'Flight 19' ?

That's it. I wanted to have viewers to focus solely on that quagmire. I set up the following taskings for the project:

ID	Cue or Question
5364/8869	'Flight 19' Topical Search
9893/4297	'Flight 19' / Disappearance EVENT
8022/8015	'Flight 19' Avenger Torpedo Aircraft / CAUSE of Disappearance
9220/1548	'Flight 19' Aircraft Piloted by Charles Carroll Taylor / Current Location NOW

The viewers received the four Target IDs only, and the fun began. Strict communication protocols were in place: no chatter about data or session work amongst themselves, any questions they may have are directed to me in strict confidence, and I reveal the project subject matter to no one until session work is complete. The viewers are located in various locales so communication was accomplished via email, fax & phone.

∴ The Data

Each Target ID is laid out separately, presenting basic ‘snapshots’ of data reported by the viewers, along with interesting visuals. The question asked by the Target ID tasking is posed, data represented and at this time NO individual conclusions made. Please keep in mind that the data contained herein is only skeletal and fundamental at best, meant to give the reader an overall impression of what viewer’s seemed to be perceiving. Taking the time to comb through individual session work is a far better way to get a complete picture and ‘feel’.

∴ Preliminary Conclusion

Did we answer any questions in regard to what happened to 'Flight 19' on 05 December 1945? Are we any closer to solving the puzzle?? Likely not. I will say however, that even though more work is continuing in looking over the data submitted, and I welcome the community' input (once all session work is publicly available) there's some very, very interesting data. Did 'Flight 19' encounter bad weather? Did they encounter some magnetic flux causing them navigational problems?? Did mechanical and \or human error occur? Or...as some suggest, did something very strange and mysterious occur??

You decide.

I'd like to thank GhostlyTalk Radio, TKR Remote Viewing Forums and of course all the remote viewers who so bravely submitted work.

In memory of 'Flight 19', and their families, loved ones....
